Dear Aggie,

My daughter and I used to be close. She would tell me everything about her feelings and her day at school. However, something changed, and she is not herself anymore. She appears to be hiding things from me.

Take the other night for example. Something was really wrong because I heard a crying sound coming from her room. I didn't see her crying myself, but I saw her face when she came out. Her eyes were all red and puffy, and her nose was as big as a tomato. When I asked her about it, she just put on a smile and went into the bathroom. This kind of thing happened very often recently. I can't sleep well at night because of this. What should I do?

Worried Mom

Dear Worried Mom,

Things aren't always that bad. We often make them more serious in our head, but in real life, they are nothing to worry about. Also, your daughter is growing up and needs more space than before. She has to learn to do things and fix problems by herself. It will be hard to watch her doing that, but when she really needs you, she will come to you. You're doing a great job, so take it easy on yourself.

Aggie

32. ( ) Why does Worried Mom write to Aggie?
(A) She wants someone to help her understand her daughter.
(B) She had a good talk with her daughter.
(C) She had a big fight with her daughter.
(D) She can't go to sleep without crying.
33. ( ) What does "this" mean?
(A) The daughter was sick and needed a doctor.
(B) The daughter cried but didn't say why.
(C) The daughter hid something in the bathroom.
(D) The daughter couldn't sleep well at night.
34. ( ) What DOESN'T Aggie tell Worried Mom in the letter?
(A) You should help your daughter more often.
(B) Give your daughter some space.
(C) Don't make the problem bigger in your mind.
(D) Let your daughter do things on her own.

Dear Lost and Found:

I lost my bag on the train this afternoon. There is a dog on the cover of the bag. There is a keychain, and some notebooks are in the bag. You can see a cat doll and six keys on the keychain. Two of the keys are black and the other ones are white. One of the black keys is long, and most of the white keys are long, too. There is a scarf on the neck of the cat doll, and both of its feet wear socks.

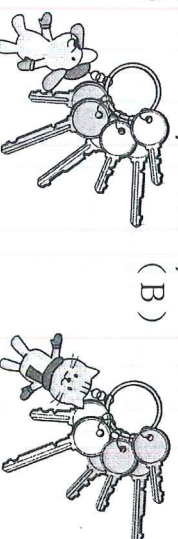

Although the cat doll is small and old, it is my birthday gift from my dad. It really means a lot to me. If you find the bag or the keychain on the train, please call me at 0902-100-000, or please send an email to me. Thanks a lot.

Polar bears are the biggest bears in the world. They live in the Arctic (北極地區) and spend most of their time on floating ice. Most of their food is from the sea. They catch seals from ice floating on the sea. Also, they have to eat a lot of food to stay fat and warm.

However, our Earth is becoming warmer because of global warming. So, the floating ice is melting under their feet now. As the sea ice goes away, polar bears have to swim longer to reach the floating ice. Many polar bears died in the water or because they were too hungry. There are only 20,000 to 25,000 polar bears left in the world now.

Polar bears are endangered animals. If we don't take action now, there will be no polar bears in 80 years.
