

THE ANT AND THE GRASSHOPPER

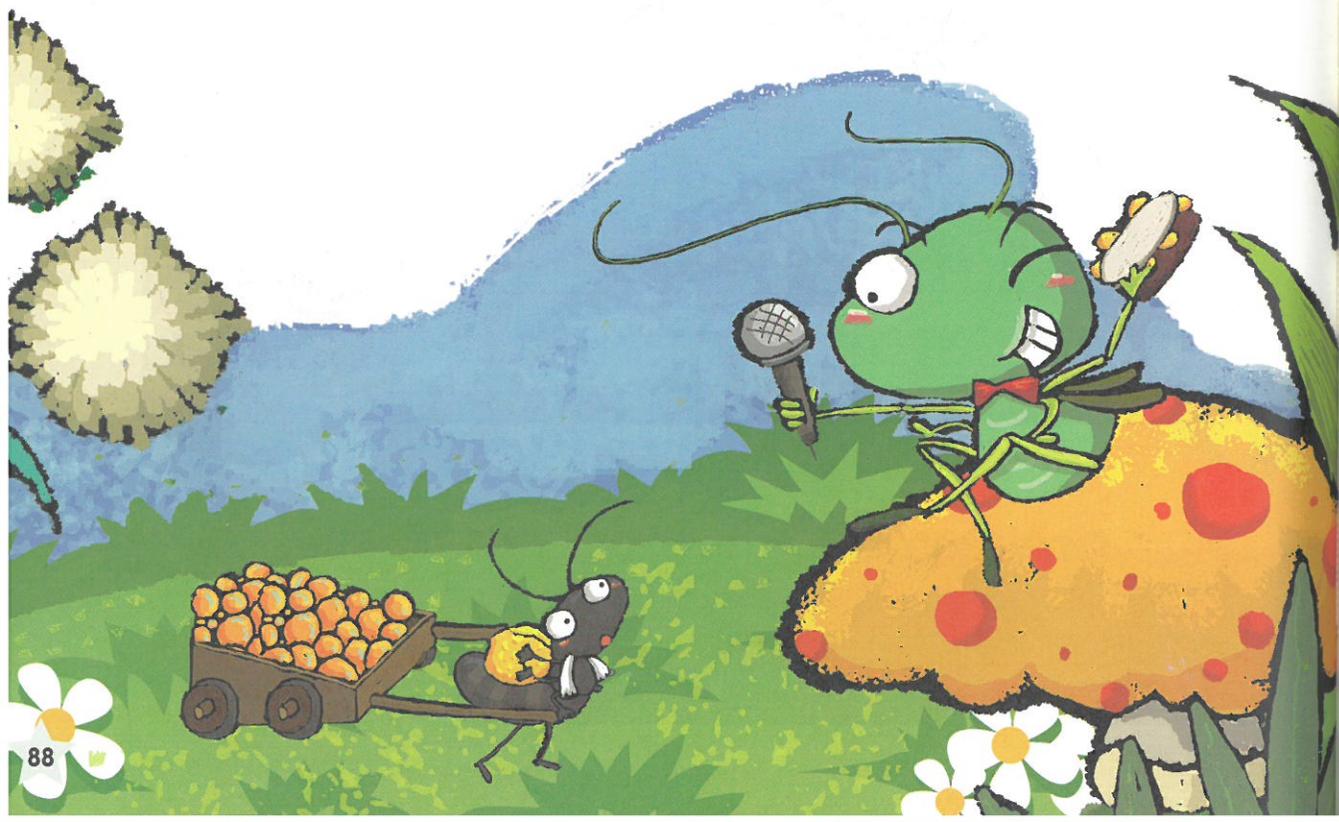

On a hot summer's day, a grasshopper was hopping and playing around. He saw an ant pass by with some food on his back.

"Why don't you come and have fun with me?" asked the grasshopper.

"I'm getting some food for the winter," said the ant. "You should do the same."

"Winter is still far away. It's summer now. It's time to have some fun," said the grasshopper.

The ant kept working hard. He built his house and got food for the winter. The grasshopper had nothing for the coming winter.

Winter came, and the ant was safe and warm, but the grasshopper was hungry and cold. He was looking for something to eat.

"I need food to eat," said the grasshopper.

"Why didn't you get food in the summer?" said the ant.

The grasshopper was cold and looking for a place to stay.

"I need a place to stay," said the grasshopper.

"Why didn't you build a house in the summer?" said the ant.

The grasshopper was hungry and cold. "I should do something before the winter, just like you do," said the grasshopper.

"Yes, you should. If you play all summer, you will have nothing all winter," said the ant.

There is a time for work and a time for play. We should work hard for the future.
