Why the Sun and the Moon Live in the Sky

The Sun and the Water were great friends, and they lived together on Earth. Every day they would dance and play together on the beach. The Sun lived together with the Moon in a very small house, whereas the Water's house was big with a gentle wind all around the house.

One day the Sun and the Moon decided to build a big new house with wind, light and warm weather. The house was so big that it stretched as far as the eye could see. The next day, they invited the Water and his family to come for a party.

“May I come in?” the Water asked when he arrived.

“Of course, my dear friend,” answered the Sun and the Moon.

So the Water and his family began to come through the door. Tiny fish, crabs, snails came in first, soon the water was knee-deep. “Shall we keep coming in?” the Water asked the Sun. “Of course!” the Sun answered. “The party is just beginning!”

Then sharks, dolphins, and huge whales poured into the Sun's house, and more water poured through the windows as well as the doors. Soon, the water was high enough to cover a person's head.

Again the Water asked the Sun if he with his family could keep coming in. “Of course!” the Sun said again.

Finally, there was so much water and his entire family in the house that the Sun and the Moon had to sit on the roof.

“Should we keep coming in?” the Water asked. The Sun and the Moon were having too much fun to say no.

More water and more sea creatures poured into the house until it was completely full. The Sun and the Moon had to go in the sky at two ends of the Earth, and that is where they have lived ever since.
